Description

This single-storey brick house, built in several stages, is set within a lovely cottage garden. The earliest part of the house is a symmetrical, double-fronted house with a hipped roof. Extensions to the rear in perhaps the 1910s/20s have added several more rooms. On the south side of the house, the extensions continue the same form as the original. Of the north side, the extensions include a projecting wing with a gabled roof. The verandah extends on three sides of the house, linking the earliest and later sections. The verandah roof, supported on metal rails, has an unusually deep curve, creating a tent-like sense of enclosure. It is in need of repair.

Externally, the major change to the house is the painting of the face brickwork.
